Cut Badly When Caught In Brick-Making Machine.
IS PLANT ENGINEER
Victor Taken to Hospital for Surgeon's Examination.

Arch Cannon, engineer for the Hope Brick company and well known local citizen, was severely injured Monday morning in an accident at the brick plant.

New Variety of Cotton Approved

Arkansas Rowden "40" Is Urged for All Local Planting.

The Arkansas Experiment Station has been doing a great deal of work in improving some of the best varieties. As a result of this work there is one strain of Rowden cotton which has been developed to the point where it is one of the most important strains in Arkansas, if not the most important.

This strain is called Rowden 40 or Arkansas Rowden. It is called Arkansas Rowden because it has been bred up to fit Arkansas conditions. Rowden 40 is known successfully on practically all types of soil. However, there are a few cases where some other variety should receive preference. On heavy delta soil, free from disease, Delfos is one of the best. If wilt is present on heavy soil, Arkansas 17, D. and P. L. No. 6, and Express are among the best.

In the extreme northern part of the state where earliness is important, a strain of Acala and Trice might be substituted for Rowden 40. While Rowden 40 is adapted to practically all Arkansas conditions there are some other varieties which might be substituted even in places not mentioned previously. These varieties include Acala, D. and P. L. Wilson Type Big Bull, which was bred up from Cleveland, Miller, and possibly a few others.

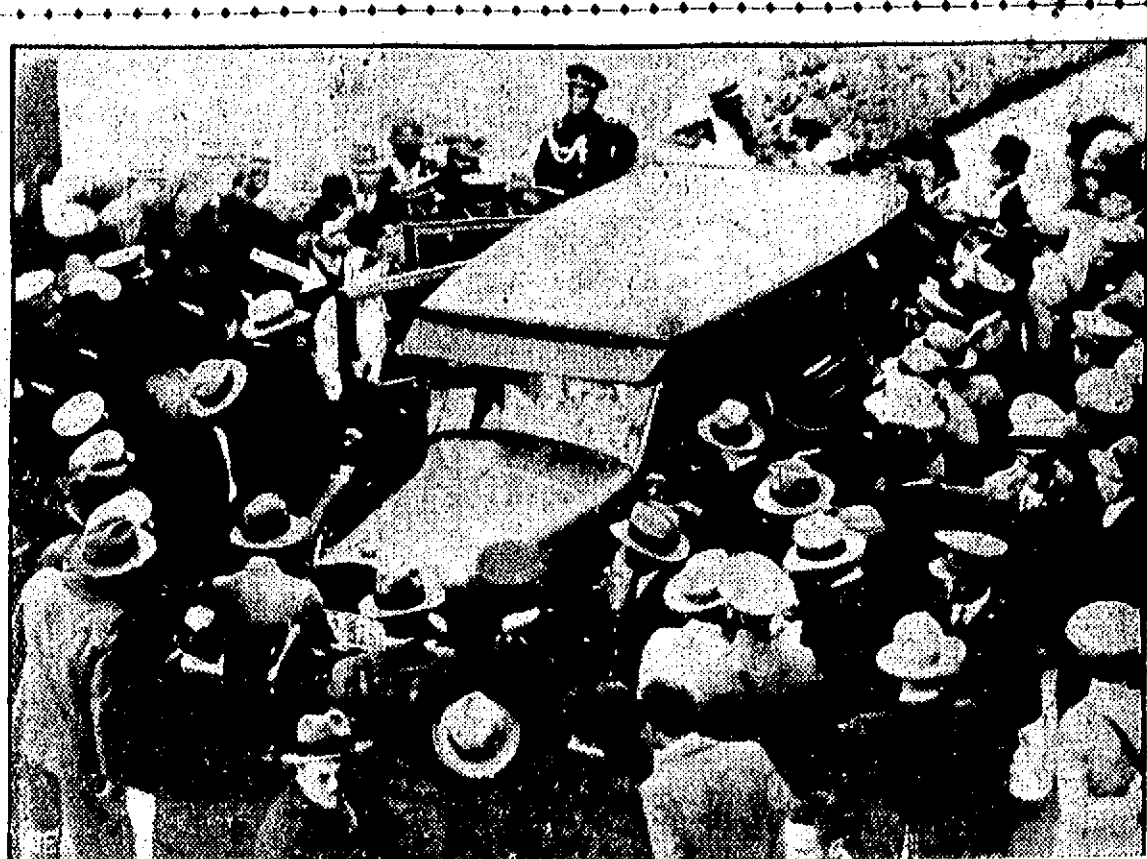

But it should be remembered that under ordinary conditions Rowden 40 possesses all the requirements for a good variety of cotton to a marked degree.

The Cotton Branch Experiment Station has recently issued its final report of the cotton variety test for 1929. This report is very complete giving all of the important qualities of each variety including yield, earliness, size of ball, length of staple, per cent lint, value per acre, and day required to pick a bale. In all of these qualities Rowden 40 compares favorably with any other variety.

Rowden 36 should not be confused with old Rowden or Texas Rowden. The objection to old Rowden is that the variety is too late and has too much foliage. In the variety test by the Cotton Branch Experiment Station the results show that about 5 per cent of Rowden 40 was picked on September 4, while one-third of Texas Rowden was picked on that date. The most important difference, however, is the yield of lint. Rowden 40 produced 151 pounds more lint per acre than Texas Rowden. At 18 cents per pound the difference in value of lint is $27.18 per acre.

This difference between Arkansas Rowden and Texas Rowden is an illustration of the fact that it is better to buy seed which are known to be adapted to Arkansas conditions rather than to buy seed from a far away section.

Expect Ruling In Bank Case Today

Supreme Court May Pass On Ouachita Valley Case.

CAMDEN, Feb. 10.—The case of the Ouachita Valley Bank and the Bank of Smackover vs. the defunct Ouachita Valley Bank is on the docket of the supreme court for trial today. The suit involves approximately $110,000, which the plaintiff banks allege is due them on notes made at the Ouachita Valley Bank and put on deposit in the banks at Smackover and Louann.

The suit was tried in chancery court here and Chancellor Leroy rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, ruling that the Ouachita Valley Bank should pay the claims of the Smackover and Louann banks on the same basis as the claims of depositors and other creditors of the bank. Attorneys for the Ouachita Valley Bank appealed the case to the supreme court.

Since the failure of the Ouachita Valley Bank two years ago a total of 55 per cent of the money due has been paid the depositors and other creditors of the bank. Fifty per cent was paid when the Camden Bank and Trust Company was formed to take over the assets of the bank to be liquidated.

Several months ago the Camden Bank and Trust Company was consolidated with the First National Bank and the liquidation of the assets of the defunct bank was put in the hands of Don W. Harrel, deputy bank commissioner. Another dividend of five per cent was paid the bank's creditors near the close of 1929, making a total of 55 per cent. Should the supreme court render a decision in favor of the plaintiff banks the commissioner will have to pay the Smackover and Louann banks 55 per cent of their claims on the same basis as the other creditors.

WOULD BEAT HOPE

Object of Prize Is To Win Honor From Hempstead Farmers.

Offer of a cash prize of $100 for the first watermelon grown in Phillips county weighing at least 155 pounds was made Saturday by Senator John M. Quarrels through the generosity of an unknown party whose name Senator Quarrels was not privileged to divulge, according to the Helena World.

The contest is open to anyone in the county, white or colored, rich or poor, young or old, Senator Quarrels said.

The object of the prize is to win away from Hempstead county, the honor of growing the largest watermelon on record, one weighing 152 1-2 pounds at Hope, Ark., last year.

The farmers of Hempstead county make big money raising watermelons," Senator Quarrels said, "and the farmers of Phillips county can do the same thing. There have been large watermelons raised in this county, and the same thing can be done in the future."

Ghost Haunts Pullman Shop

Workman Claims Headless Figure Threw Overcoat at Him.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—There is a headless ghost haunting around the shops of the Pullman Car and Manufacturing plant at Michigan City, Ind. John Laudwich, a workman, claims, he saw it and hasn't been back to work since.

According to his tale, it was about midnight when he was walking through the gloomy car shed and heard a muffled tapping. Searching for the cause, he found a headless figure rapping on the side of a new car.

Laudwich hurled a brick at the apparition and it returned the compliment by casting an overcoat over his head. There may be some doubt as to the specter but he has the overcoat as tangible evidence. When Laudwich disentangled himself he left the scene without further investigation.

The episode recalled the disappearance of a negro worker several months ago and reports that he had been murdered and his body burned in a furnace.

An explanation much less convincing to the superstitious element attributed this disappearance to efforts by the police to arrest the man.

But nevertheless, workmen about the plant at night are somewhat uneasy and can be seen casting apprehensive glances over their shoulders.

Government to make the first record of the universal language which consists of finger, hand and whole arm gestures coupled with the Red Man's well known grunts and ejaculations, according to a bill which recently was approved by the Congressional Committee on Indian Affairs.

The measure is sponsored by Congressman Leavitt of this state, who would authorize the taking of "Indian talkies" as an historical event under the supervision of Major General Hugh Scott, retired. General Scott, in making this notable film record of the Red Man's unique universal conversational language, will bring out much of the Indian's religious life by introducing ceremonial rites as subject matter for the sound camera.

Examination Reveals Traces of Poison Found in Vital Organs

Mrs. Bertie Gentry, the widow, and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Luke Tidkeon are accused of poisoning James F. Gentry, aged 24, a railroad employee, to collect a $7,000 insurance policy. Mrs. Gentry is held on a first degree murder charge and her parents are accused as her accomplices.

The young widow underwent a 24 hour drill by lawyers here following her arrest. Her parents have not been questioned yet, and have made no statement, although officers here said Mrs. Gentry admitted purchasing a quantity of poison at a Strong's drug store a short time before the death of her husband, but said that he died following an overdose of medicine.

Only Three Were Normal

A DETROIT judge the other day got curious about the mentality of the criminals who were coming before him for sentence. So he got a psychiatric clinic to examine 100 of them, chosen at random. The results were surprising.

Only three of the 100 were found normal. Two were outright insane. Thirty-three more were feeble-minded; 25 more were branded of "inferior intelligence" and the remaining 37 had "deviations in personality" which, the psychiatrists said, handicapped them in their efforts to adjust themselves to their environment.

Summing up, the psychiatrists recommended that two of the group be sent to insane asylums and that 71 more be imprisoned as "poor community risks." Fifteen were called "reasonable good community risks," and were placed on probation by the judge; and of 12 classes das doubtful the judge imprisoned some and paroled some.

These findings shed a good deal of light on our "crime situation."

The judge who called in the psychiatrists only did what every court ought to be doing regularly. The results that he got prove it.

Obviously, if only three per cent of convicted criminals are normal mentally and emotionally, a set of codes and punishments devised on the basis that the average wrong-doer is fully normal is not going to work. The man who is off balance cannot be swayed by arguments, threats and coercive measures such as would move an ordinary mortal. He needs some sort of special treatment; just what that treatment might be, our psychiatrists could probably tell us.

All of this is a simple matter of self-protection. This special treatment is not something that we owe the criminal; it is something we owe ourselves. Considering the speed with which our prison population is growing, it is fairly evident that our present system is not protecting us from hold-up men, murderers and kidnapers. Why not follow the lead of this Detroit judge and see if psychiatry cannot defend us a little better?

The Origin of A Legend

IF YOU recall the early days of the World War, you will doubtless remember the famous legend of the Angels of Mons. It was a legend that appeared in the fall of 1914, and its strengthening was badly needed.

When the British army was falling back before the first irresistible sweep of the Germans, the allied cause seemed lost. It looked as if nothing could stay the retreat. But this legend popped up to help stiffen morale, the British were not driven into the channel after all, and the German advance was halted.

The legend had it that the British rear guard, amid the battle ruck, suddenly noted gigantic, shadowy figures in the clouds, discharging invisible arrows at the Germans. Some soldiers even asserted that the Germans fell in rows before this defense. At all events, the tale made a big impression—and thousands of Britishers actually believed that some supernatural force had been made manifest on this occasion.

But now Colonel Friedrich Herzenwirth, formerly of the Imperial German Intelligence Service, says that it was all a trick—a German trick, which had just the opposite effect to that which had been planned.

A German plane, he says, hovered over the British lines, and with a movie projector cast moving picture shapes on a cloud bank where the British soldiers could see them. It hoped, by doing this, to spread terror and confusion; the same stunt had been tried on the eastern front and had worked beautifully, filling the superstitious Russians with fear and awe.

But it didn't work that way. Instead of terrorizing the British, it actually strengthened their morale. So the Germans never tried it again.

This revelation is extremely interesting. Wartime legends sometimes have strange origins.

Brass

THE squirmings that some of Chicago's leading politicians are indulging in these days are about as laughable as anything in all American politics.

The city is broke—broke, and with no prospect of raising any money for months to come. This situation is due to political mismanagement of the most brazen kind. Yet when a group of business men comes forward, stipulating only that they have control of its expenditures, the politicians who mismanaged Chicago into its present mess have the nerve to protest.

The committee, they complain, is undermining the citizen's confidence in their elected officials!

The only answer to that is a good laugh. For sheer brass that complaint would be almost impossible to equal anywhere.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BARBS

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The coast guard, to say the least, is as much to be pitied as blamed.

Whatever may be thought of some of its shootings and the recorded cases of personnel involved in graft or the theft and consumption of liquor, there is plenty of sympathy here for able and honest officers and men who have spent much of their lives in the service and whose memories antedate the period when it came to be known as the "dry navy."

The coast guard, operating under its present name for only 15 years, has been in business for 135 years, saving life and property and frequently performing acts of the greatest heroism.

Gains Many Enemies

Today it is doing more of that work than ever before, but through its activities in combating rum runners has achieved a degree of unpopularity seldom if ever matched by any of the old federal services. It still has many friends and possesses especially ardent admirers among the drys, but by millions of others it is regarded in an unfavorable light. Many army and navy officers profess to view the coast guard with contempt. Secretary of the Navy Adams was recently quoted as warning Bostonians that would-be observers in uniform were very likely not sailors at all, but only members of the coast guard. General Clarence R. Edwards, who commanded the 26th division in the A. E. F., has said army men would resign rather than perform the duties allotted to the coast guard. A captain of marines talking to this writer the other day, went much further in expressing what he insisted was a general feeling among military and naval men concerning the guard's loss of prestige.

Of course there are always some people glad to find a pretext for looking down on certain other people. And there are army and navy men with a stern sense of duty who hold that the coast guard is doing as well as can be expected in a difficult situation. It is also commonly recognized that few military and naval men are personally dry when they can help it.

Nevertheless, many coast guardsmen, including officers, agree that these are bad days compared with the good old days. In helping enforce prohibition by combating smugglers the service has encountered a torrent of public criticism and abuse of which there was once never a whisper. Much of this has come about through overzeal or gross malfeasance on the part of personnel, but much has also arisen from no more than the conscientious performance of duty.

In the old days officers never had to complain, as they do now, that girls in public dance halls refused to dance with coast guardsmen. Popular sentiment has been reported against the guard in the places where the service has been most active, climaxing sometimes in public demonstrations and attacks on guardsmen off base. Such adverse sentiment has been especially pronounced in New York, Boston, London and Florida. Outbursts from the press and other sources have always followed such occurrences as the I'm Alone sinking, the shooting up of innocent yachting parties, the arrest of a couple of dozen guardsmen for stealing and drinking liquor in New London, the three Black Duck killings, the corruption of poorly paid men by offers of large sums and various abuses.

Despite many acts of heroism, both in combating rum-runners and its more peaceful lines of duty, the guard finds that this prohibition job which it never wanted has lowered it in public esteem. Officially this isn't admitted, but unofficially it is often conceded.

COLDS MAY DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

School Students Contest Started

Much Enthusiasm Shown By Pupils In Big Prize Offer.

Last week's issue carried the news story of the contest sponsored by the Hendrix Auto Company, and the district office of the Hope Star at Blevins, awarding prizes to pupils from the first to the seventh grade, including best averages in studies and spelling. Each Monday, on the first page of the Hope Star, the names of the pupils, standing in their classes, were to be published. Due to the absence of the fifth grade teacher during the week, no names were obtained from those classes. Next week the names of the students from these local schools will not be omitted.

Monday are the names of the pupils in the highest in their class for the month ending February 2nd:

Second grade—J. W. Foster, Olan Brooks, Doris Osborn and Clara Bell Harris.
Third grade—Ena Fern Stephens, Thelma Irvin, Willie Mouser and Christine Mouser.

Sixth grade—Juanita Mullins, Ruby Johnson, C. E. Bruce, Opal Yates and Marie Ward.

Seventh grade—Darless Mouser, Annie Gean Brown, Jimmie Lee, Violet Cross and Lucille Lee.

The prizes will be awarded after the close of the school month. If your name does not appear in this week's list, put forth a little more effort this next week, and be one of the high five. These prizes are awarded to those standing highest at the end of the month, although the standings will be published each Monday.

Ginkgo Bilboa Fruit Fools Park Visitors

ST. LOUIS.—The fruit of the ginkgo bilboa is a wolf in sheep's clothing to many St. Louis folks. Inquisitive visitors to Shaw's garden, pause to pick up the ripe and wrinkled "persimmons" covering the ground in front of the Palm House. The unwary ones who fail to notice that the trees bearing the fruit have a resemblance to persimmon trees, find a bite most enlightening for the reason the peel releases butyric acid.

Sales Day To Be Feature In Blevins

McCaskill Loses Store In Blaze

Merchant Suffers Heavy Loss By Fire of Unknown Origin.

A fire threatened the business houses on the east side of Main street McCaskill early Thursday morning. The building and its contents, totally destroyed, were owned by E. A. Long and Son. Residents were awakened by howling of a dog, which spread the alarm. The building was of sheet iron construction and little damage was done to the other store buildings that were near by. Had it been of a frame nature no doubt the whole block would have burned, and heavier losses would have occurred. The origin of the fire is not known, and no estimate has been made of the loss, but it is partially covered by insurance. It was stated that the building would be rebuilt.

Definite Location For Radish Vat

New Location To Be Two Blocks North of This City.

After a number of sites had been suggested, for a place for the new radish vat, it was definitely decided to construct it two blocks north of the station, on the present grounds of the stock pens. These pens are now being torn down, and will be rebuilt farther north, about four blocks. The radish vat will be of solid concrete, ten by one hundred and ten feet, and three feet deep. It will be large enough to accommodate one hundred growers at a time. A new Fairbanks Morse pump, bought of the Hendrix Auto Company, and driven by electricity, will be installed to pump fresh water, through a two-inch pipe, from the deep well near-by. As the debris accumulates from the radishes it will be shoveled out and hauled away to some distant point. A loading platform will be built between the vat and the spur which will be enlarged to accommodate about twenty express cars. This will be the "last word" in vat construction, and will prove far more successful than any that has been used in past seasons. It will be ready by the time

A Substantial City Residence

Six-Room House No. 637

Designed for American Face Brick Association

THE architect of the house illustrated above had especially in mind the needs of a family with a comparatively narrow city lot, and this is, incidentally, one of the hardest problems an architect has to meet. It is relatively a simple matter to design a house that is going to have an effective setting and where there is plenty of ground room. The possibilities for a house on a narrow lot are, however, restricted.

In this instance, the architect has designed a simple, substantial exterior that has a real dignity. The wall surfaces lend themselves to a great variety of pattern treatment in the brickwork. The color and texture of the brick will also contribute materially to the appearance of the house.

A study of the floor plans will at once reveal the fact that nothing has been omitted to make a modern home. The main rooms are large, the living room opening on one side to a screened porch, while a sun parlor opens from the dining room, to which space is added by a good bay, useful for flowers and the like.

The kitchen is well lighted and ventilated, with the windows over the sink on one side and the built-in breakfast nook on the other. The refrigerator is placed in the pantry and iced from outside. There is a connection from the kitchen to the front hall passing the lavatory, coat closet, and basement stairs, and giving convenient access to the front door.

On the second floor are three large bedrooms, all well lighted and ventilated, an ample bathroom, and numerous closets. Stairways to the attic and to the kitchen are very desirable features.

The basement contains heater and fuel room, laundry drying space, vegetable cellar and a garbage incinerator. There is an outside entrance to the basement.

With a driveway at one side as shown, forty-five to fifty feet would be the minimum lot. The first floor is well above the ground, giving good basement light.

The ceiling heights are 8 feet 6 inches, and the content 38,520 cubic feet.

The End of the Road

Every year one or more of the old boys comes to the end of the road. It was Walter Johnson, a couple of years ago. The other day the name of Carl Mays was stricken from the big league roster. Artie Nehf pitched his last futile effort in that mad seventh-inning of the fourth world series game at Philadelphia. This year Old Aleck is on his last long mile in the majors. Forty-three years old, heavily on a man's shoulders out there on that pitcher's mound.

Old Aleck! What drama he gave us! Back in 1926, after a night in a poor-hole saloon on New York's 43rd street, and a gray dawn, cruising in a taxicab, seeking an address in St. Louis, he was called to the pitcher's mound in Yankee Stadium in the crisis of that last world series game between the Cards and Yankees. An aching head, but the courageous call to his mates, "Keep your shirt on!" He hadn't been able to find his address in the early morning, but there on the slab that afternoon, he was at home. They couldn't beat Old Aleck in that one big moment.

One More Big Moment? The graying veteran coming to the end of his pitching road has had other big moments in his 19 seasons of masterful pitching. This year we suggest they give him another big moment that may be the old boy's last—an Alexander Day. The scene for the event should be Philadelphia, where the Nebraska boy made his debut and where he will take his final curtain call.

Old Aleck has been a power on the mound, and a child off the diamond. He is generous and likeable. Money has rolled like water through his fingers. He has earned in the neighborhood of $200,000 as a pitcher and now he is broke. Don't you figure we owe him a little something more? In return for the big moments he has given us?

Bill Killefer, manager of the Braves, was Aleck's first battery mate. He saw Aleck last year before the veteran left for Nebraska. There were tears in the old boy's eyes when he said, "Bill, if I came out of Nebraska broke and I guess I can go back that way."

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

We were off our base when we said that Frankie Fleming, who kayoed Benny Leonard once, was arrested the other day on a burglary charge. The real Frankie is a prosperous business man in Montreal. Horton Smith has been in the bucks at nearly every one of the recent golf battles. He copped three firsts, one second and was tied for second twice. He has aggregated $4500 in winnings, and is the only one of the winter golf tourists who took more than one championship. If they ever get that guy Carnera into the ring with Uzzie it will be just too bad. Hugh Walpole, the British novelist, thinks Carnera will be champion of the world. Mr. Walpole writes an interesting novel.

fore the veteran left for Nebraska. There were tears in the old boy's eyes when he said, "Bill, if I came out of Nebraska broke and I guess I can go back that way."

He Helped Others

WHEN Killefer was managing the Cubs, he had his troubles keeping Aleck in line. Whenever Grover would fall off the wagon, Bill would call him to the room, prepared to hand him some harsh words. Aleck inevitably would burst into tears and beg forgiveness.

"I loved him," says Bill, "and those who have played with him, youngsters and veterans alike, feel the same way about him. Aleck never was too busy to stop what he was doing and give a rookie a half hour of his time to help him along."

Now Aleck is broke through family troubles, bad investments and playing the good fellow. Shouldn't the fans give the gentleman one last testimonial of the affection they hold for him?

Max Loafs As Rivals Fight

Waiting for Jack Sharkey and Phil Scott To Stage Battle

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—(AP)—Rust of inactivity, bane of heavyweight headliners from the time of John L. Sullivan down, seems to have little terror of Max Schmeling, teuton bomber from the land of the Rhine. Der Maxie tours the night clubs drinking copious draughts of mineral water, loiters about his home in the Berlin suburbs and occasionally takes part in pleasant little brawls with imported heavies for the benefit of moving picture cameras. Bashful Max already has declared himself one of the outstanding candidates for the film honors of his country.

A good deal of his time, too, Max spends entertaining the various members of his American managerial staff who make frequent but unsuccessful trips to Germany in expensive efforts to lure the dawdling one back to the profitable rings of the United States. In vain they assure him that all has been forgiven by the boxing commissions with which he wrangled during his last visit.

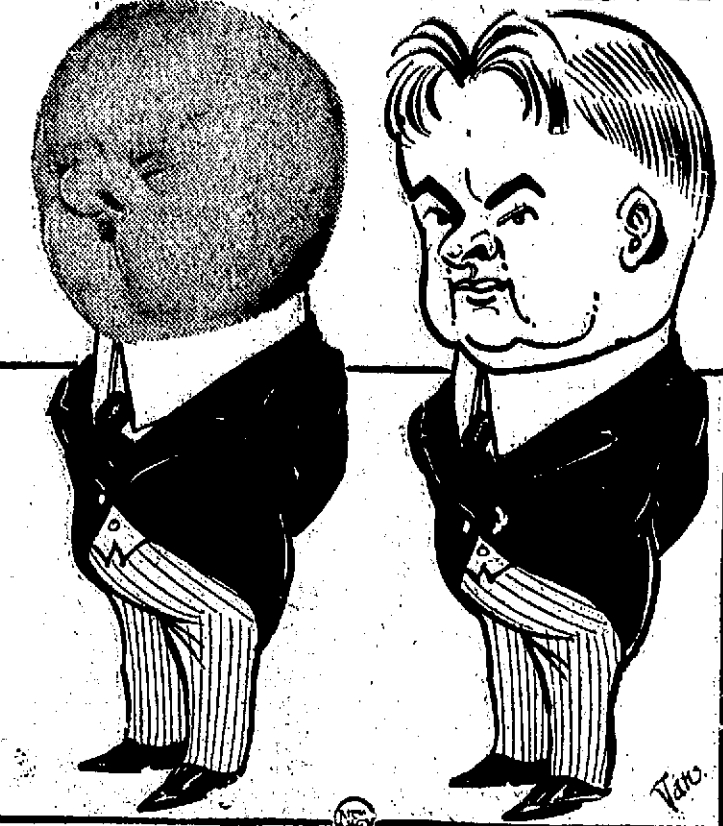

So far Max has been content to rest upon his laurels in the homeland, waiting for Jack Sharkey and Phil Scott to stage their struggle in the southland, leaving only the winner between him and the world heavyweight title Gene Tunney tossed aside for matrimony.

The German intends to stay where he is until April at least. By that time definite announcement will have been made of the matching of Schmeling with the Miami winner for a heavyweight title about in the Yankee stadium here in June. The match will be staged by the milk fund, the same charity that tossed Max in to give Paulino Uzcudun a solid trouncing last June.

Thus, when Schmeling fights again it will be after a lapse of a full year. It was a layoff twice that length that slowed up Jack Dempsey at Philadelphia, a year's rest hurt Gene Tunney at Chicago, and similar vacations have been taking the edge off famous heavyweights since the game began.

Apparently this doesn't bother Maxie's mind. He feels certain that he can always be a moving picture star.

Just Herb and an Herb as It Were!

Well, meet Mr. Hoover, whom you doubtless know, and his counterpart—the Hoovapple. The fruit is in a suit because it has attained great fame in its class. It looks like President Hoover. He almost bit it before he noticed it looked like Hoover, and saved himself from national disgrace.

New Manager of Cincinnati Reds Adds Many Veterans to 1930 Team

CINCINNATI, Feb. 10.—(AP)—A product of the old school of horse trading has established a mart of his own to stir up one of the quietest sectors in the National league.

Big league ball clubs with something to sell or trade won't offend Sidnei Weil, the Red's new president, by stating their proposition.

He has proved this much while giving Redville fans more genuine constructive activity than they have seen since Cincy grabbed its first and last pennant back in 1919.

As an associate of his father in operating a sales stable for horses in Cincinnati, Weil found that there was such a thing as trading for profit. When this business yielded to the from the Yankees in a deal involving one of the Red's second stringers and around $30,000 in cash.

On a straight swap, the Reds next lined up Doug McWeeny, the tall, temperamental right-hander whom Brooklyn thought enough of one year to pay a salary of $12,500.

Baseball men view the new Cincinnati regime with satisfaction. And if tryouts counts, the 1930 edition of the Reds should go out and bag some ball games.

Virginia produced 118,320,000 pounds of tobacco in 1929.

Georgia produced 394,550,000 pounds of peanuts in 1929.

A SUCCESSFUL souflee—browned to a turn, feathery light, is a dish to make lovers of good food give three cheers. In order to show housewives how it is done, Pierre Berard, the famous chef who presides over the finest hotel kitchens in the world at Manhattan's newest hotel—the New Yorker—is photographed with the cheese souflee he had just made.

A souflee used to be a difficult test even for experienced housewives, with more than an even chance of humiliating failure and waste of good ingredients. But nowadays this always tasty dish can be used by all as a homelike or party fare.

Here are recipes for two souflee—the savory souflee which Monsieur Berard illustrates here, accompanied by vegetables, can take the place of a meat course, and a sweet dessert souflee. They both have one ingredient in common, however—quick cooking Taploca.

RECENT investigations and experiments have placed grape juice in the list of particularly healthful foods. Its mineral content is of great value from the standpoint of nutrition.

Every home-maker knows the problem of providing the necessary mineral salts during the winter months. The heavier foods demanded to produce heat in the body make the use of a generous amount of mineral salts imperative. Certain fruit juices tend to decrease the acidities produced when much meat is eaten, and grape juice is one of the best for this purpose.

Simple puddings made with grape juice can be given to children and they help to vary the menu.

The following cornstarch pudding is suitable for children but will be liked by grown-ups as well.

Grape Juice Bavarian
Grape juice Bavarian is simple but delicious enough for a party dessert. If white grape juice is used, the effect is particularly attractive with a garnish of red cherries. Purple grape juice makes a delicate colored pudding that is most inviting garnished with blanched pistachio nuts. Here is the recipe.

Three-fourths cup grape juice, juice 1-2 lemon, 1-3 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon granulated gelatin, 4 tablespoons cold water, white 1 egg, 1-2 cup whipping cream, few grains salt.

Soften gelatin in cold water for five minutes. Dissolve over hot water. Heat grape juice and sugar enough to dissolve sugar. Remove from fire and add lemon juice and gelatin. Let cool while beating white of egg until stiff and dry. Fold into a gelatin. Fold in cream whipped until firm with salt. Turn into a mold and let stand several hours until firm and thoroughly chilled. Serve in sherbet glasses and garnish as wanted.

BEGIN HERE TODAY!

JUDITH CAMERON, New York social, married ARTHUR KNIGHT, executive of the publishing house in which she is employed. Knight is a widower with a daughter, TONY, 18, in Paris. When Tony returns home she becomes Judith as a gold digger. Tony is secretly continuing a situation with MICKEY MURPHY, wealthy and married. When Junior comes home for the Christmas holidays he also treats Judith coldly.

ANDY CHAIK, whom Knight has helped through college, takes a position with the publishing firm. He has been in love with Tony for a long while. In a fit of anger Tony tells her father that she is carrying on an affair, Knight denies this but Tony tells the pair into a compromising situation.

TONY's situation with Mickey is revealed when they are arrested for reckless driving. Tony wins her father's forgiveness and promises to get a trip to Miami. Preparations are interrupted when Knight comes home seriously ill with pneumonia. Two weeks are installed in the household and Junior is summoned home. At last the patient begins to recover. Before Junior leaves he admits to Judith that he has misjudged her. Knight's recuperation is slow. Judith takes a plane with her husband when he says he has something to tell her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXIV

WITH an effort which cost him much, Arthur Knight raised himself on one elbow. His dark eyes looked bright and too intense. They bespoke the weakened condition in which weeks of illness had left him.

"You do this too often, Judith," he said. "I don't want you giving up all your pleasures just because I've got to stay here in bed. You're not going to sacrifice—"

Judith interrupted. "Why, Arthur! How ridiculous! Here you mustn't try to sit up like that. It isn't good for you. Dr. Shephard would be perfectly furious to hear of such a thing. Please! Lie down again and let me read to you, won't you?"

Stubbornly Knight shook his head. Nevertheless, he did drop back against the pillow.

"No, I don't want you sending the others away and giving up all your time to take care of me as though I were a child."

"But, Darling, I WANT to be with you! I thought we'd both enjoy a little while together."

"It isn't that," the man went on rather pettishly. "It isn't that at all. I want you to have good times, Judith."

She was able to hush him into acquiescence, laughing at his protests and finally accusing him of being tired of her. It was all just a joke, of course. After the sick man was reasonably comfortable once more Judith picked up the magazine she had brought to read. She turned to a piece of fiction by an author whose work he admired and began the story.

Judith read well, for her voice was low, distinct and decidedly pleasing. Ever since the early days of Knight's recuperation it had been one of her chief pleasures to read to him.

It did not come to her notice that the listener was restless that afternoon until at the end of a column she came to the words, "Continued on page 165."

This meant turning a number of pages. As Judith did so, hunting for the right one, she glanced toward the bed.

Arthur Knight was staring toward the window. He did not appear even to be aware that the narrative had been interrupted.

His preoccupation was so marked that Judith put down the book.

"Arthur," she asked uncertainly, "don't you care for the story? Does the reading bother you?"

"The man shook his head." "Go ahead and finish it," he said. "There was such lack of interest in his tone, however, that the girl was disturbed. She was glad when the climax of the tale had been reached and the last paragraph finished."

"I think you'd better rest now a while," she told Knight. "I'll read to myself. Is there anything I can get for you?"

There was not, her husband said. He turned his head on the pillow and closed his eyes. Judith was not able to tell whether he fell asleep.

At 4:20 Miss Mallory returned and the rest of the day was as its predecessors had been.

Dr. Shephard continued to make his daily calls. On Wednesday he told Judith there was no further need of continuing the services of the night nurse. Miss Owens departed that afternoon.

"Of course," Judith told Miss Mallory, "while you're off duty in the afternoons I'll stay with Mr. Knight and I think we can manage about the evenings, too. If you'd like to go into the city occasionally it will be all right because of course I'll be here all the time anyhow."

This conversation did not take place in the patient's room. When, two evenings later, the nurse gathered up Knight's supper tray to carry it from the room the nurse paused at the bedside, smiling.

"I guess there's nothing else now, is there? You're going to have a new nurse this evening."

"A new nurse?"

"Yes, Mrs. Knight is going to stay with you. She said I might go into the city. Will you want anything else before I go?"

"No, Nothing else."

Miss Mallory departed amid the rustling of stiff starched linens. When Judith entered the room 10 minutes later she looked a picture. Impulse had inspired her to dress for the occasion in a rose chiffon dinner gown. The custom of dressing for dinner had been dropped in the Knight household ever since meals had become brief, unimportant intervals with only one or two members appearing at the table.

Tonight Judith wore Arthur's pearls about her throat. She had rouged her cheeks and powdered as carefully as if she had been going to the theater. The warm color of her frock reflected upon her face and in the subdued light of the bedroom her slender figure stood out as graceful as a flame.

She came in laughing. "Good evening, Mr. Knight. I hope you like your new nurse?"

"Very much indeed. Looking beautiful, my dear."

"I wanted you to think so." He smiled at her.

"Very beautiful," Knight repeated. "And married to an old man who keeps you shut away from all the good times in the world. Oh, you needn't contradict me. I know it's true."

JUDITH had thrown herself into the chair beside the bed.

"Arthur, why will you insist on saying these absurd things?" "Second childhood."

"Oh—but I don't want you to joke about it! Please, won't you understand that I don't want to go anywhere without you? Just a little while and you'll be yourself again. Then we'll go everywhere and make up for what we've missed. Besides—I don't think I'm missing anything."

He shook his head. "You're married to an old man, Judith. Put back on the shelf!"

She was unable to shake him from this half-melancholy, half-banter mood all through the evening. It distressed Judith to see long days spent in the sick room have such an effect upon her husband.

Something was bothering Arthur Knight and Judith could not help feeling that this something concerned herself.

She did not take his mood seriously. That was to be reserved for next day.

The awakening came at luncheon. Judith and Tony were having the mid-day meal together when the younger girl spoke up unexpectedly.

"Going into town this afternoon?" she asked.

"Why—no!"

"Oh, Sorry. I thought possibly you'd take my watch in and leave it to have the clasp repaired. I can't make the thing work and I'm afraid to wear it. I'd go in myself only I have to read to Father."

Involuntarily Judith straightened.

"What are you going to read?" she asked.

"Don't know. Some book he's got around that he says he's interested in. Horrible, I suppose. I think it's something about Henry VIII or one of those old bores."

Judith looked at her stepdaughter through narrowed lashes. The girl seemed completely innocent and unaware of the effect of her words. And Judith had only the evening before begun reading to her husband a recent biography of that famed monarch.

Was this idea something new of Tony's or had it come from Arthur Knight? The way to find out was quite simple.

Since meals had become such unpretentious affairs the luncheon was soon over. Judith immediately went upstairs. She invented an errand which sent the nurse from Knight's room. Then she said:

"Tony tells me she's going to read to you this afternoon."

"Yes."

No explanation or qualifying phrases. Just the bare affirmative. Judith hesitated.

"But I thought you wanted me to read?" she went on, blushing with embarrassment.

A frown appeared in Arthur Knight's forehead. He glanced away before answering.

"Oh, you can find some other way to amuse yourself. You see I asked Tony to stay with me while Miss Mallory was out, and reading is about the only way to pass the time. Why don't you have Bert drive you in for a matinee?"

JUDITH'S face had flushed hotly but now it was quite pale.

"It's a good idea," she said. "Perhaps I'll do it."

"Fine. Have a good time." Why, he was positively eager to get her out of the house! Judith took one more quick glance at her husband. Perhaps she would have spoken but Miss Mallory appeared again in the doorway. Miss Mallory, who was so efficient and competent-mannered, smiled as though the whole world were bathed in sunshine.

"Don't you think he's looking fine today?" she asked, with a nod toward the patient.

"Much better," Judith agreed. "Going to have him sitting up before long, aren't you?"

"We'll, we'll go a little slow about that! Next week, perhaps, for an hour or so a day. You see I know just how these men are! Want to climb right out of bed the minute they're able to eat a square meal and start playing golf. We'll have him up just as soon as the doctor gives the word."

"Next week!" Knight insisted from his bed.

Judith, smiling, hoping with all her heart that the smile would be deceptive. She didn't want either the nurse or her husband to know how heavy her heart had suddenly become.

"I'll look in again before I leave," she said brightly and went out of the room.

Across the hall she knocked at Tony's door but there was no response.

Slowly Judith made her way downstairs. Throughout those grim days when Arthur had been fighting for life, when the nurses moved on tiptoe and only they and the doctor were permitted within the sick room, Judith had prayed for the future. A thousand times as she reassured herself that her husband must get well, Judith had envisioned his convalescence. She could be near him then, could care for him and wait on him tenderly. Surely that was a wife's part!

Vividly she recalled other occasions when Knight had urged her to find entertainment for herself and leave him alone. He didn't want her!

"Oh, Tony!" Judith called to the other girl. "I've changed my mind about going into town. I'll be glad to take your watch."

"Going soon?"

"Just as soon as I can dress."

Thirty minutes later Judith left the house. She did not ask Bert to drive her in the car. Moreover, as she stepped into the train she gave it a quick, careful search to be sure no one was aboard who knew her.
